Construction on the University of North Texas' new $70 million College of Visual Arts and Design building began Tuesday in a move university officials hope will bolster the college's recruiting efforts.

Greg Watts, dean of UNT's College of Visual Arts and Design, said the school has talented faculty, students and curriculum, "but we just don't have the facilities at the level to deliver it," he said. "As a recruitment tool, this is a game-changer. We'll be state-of-the-art."
